

Madison schools' "value-added growth" scores

These charts list the number of extra points that students at each school scored on state tests in 2006 and 2007 compared to the average amount of growth in the Madison School District. The analysis accounts for demographic factors in an attempt to focus upon the impact of schools upon test scores.

Example: The math scores of students at Allis Elementary improved 2.99 points less per year compared to the average amount of improvement attained by district students.
